One of the world's leading voice teachers

November and December 2014, exclusively at the Body Voice Centre, Melbourne

With over 40 years of experience Linda Wise is considered one of the world's major teachers of voice, especially extended voice in the tradition of Alfred Wolfsohn, Roy Hart and the Roy Hart Theatre. Linda met Roy Hart when she was 19 and worked closely with him for 6 years until his death in 1975. She was a performing member of the original Roy Hart Theatre and a founder member of the Roy Hart Centre in the South of France. In 1981 she joined the research of Enrique Pardo and has co-directed Pantheatre with him since 1989. Pantheatre was the first independent company to emerge from the Roy Hart Theatre and continues to be a dynamic network of collaborating artists throughout the world.

Passionately concerned with a vision of the voice that engages the widest possible perspective on each person's individuality and artistic specificity, Linda constantly re-questions her work and incorporates into her practice a range of vocal approaches from Roy Hart's extended ranges, to bel canto, ethnic techniques and stylistic demands, but the central vision of her work remains the individual voice of the person with whom she is working and the deep work to make a connection between the "inner sensation" and the "outer manifestation" that gives meaning.
